

A national teacher shortage?

Wrong scope, wrong solutions

Kate Walsh

National Council on Teacher Quality

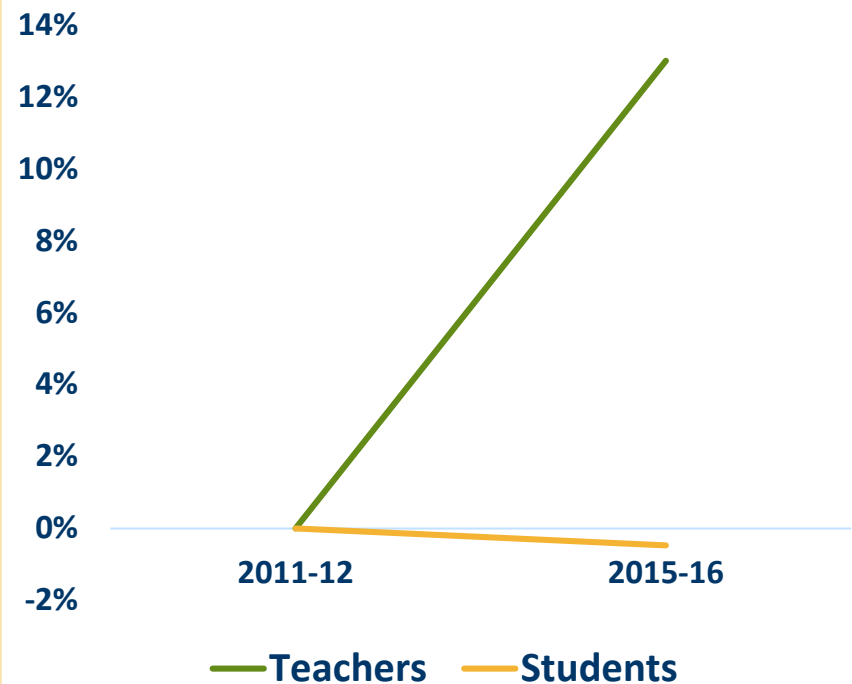

What do the data say?

Number of Public School Teachers

Change in teacher workforce and student population

Sources: 2015-16 data from NCES National Principal and Teacher Survey: <https://nces.ed.gov/surveys/ntps/>; 2011 teacher data from https://nces.ed.gov/programs/digest/d15/tables/dt15_209.20.asp; 2011 student data from <https://nces.ed.gov/pubs2013/2013312.pdf>. Historic teacher data from NCES digest of education statistics Table 209.20, https://nces.ed.gov/programs/digest/2015menu_tables.asp

Why quibble about word choice?

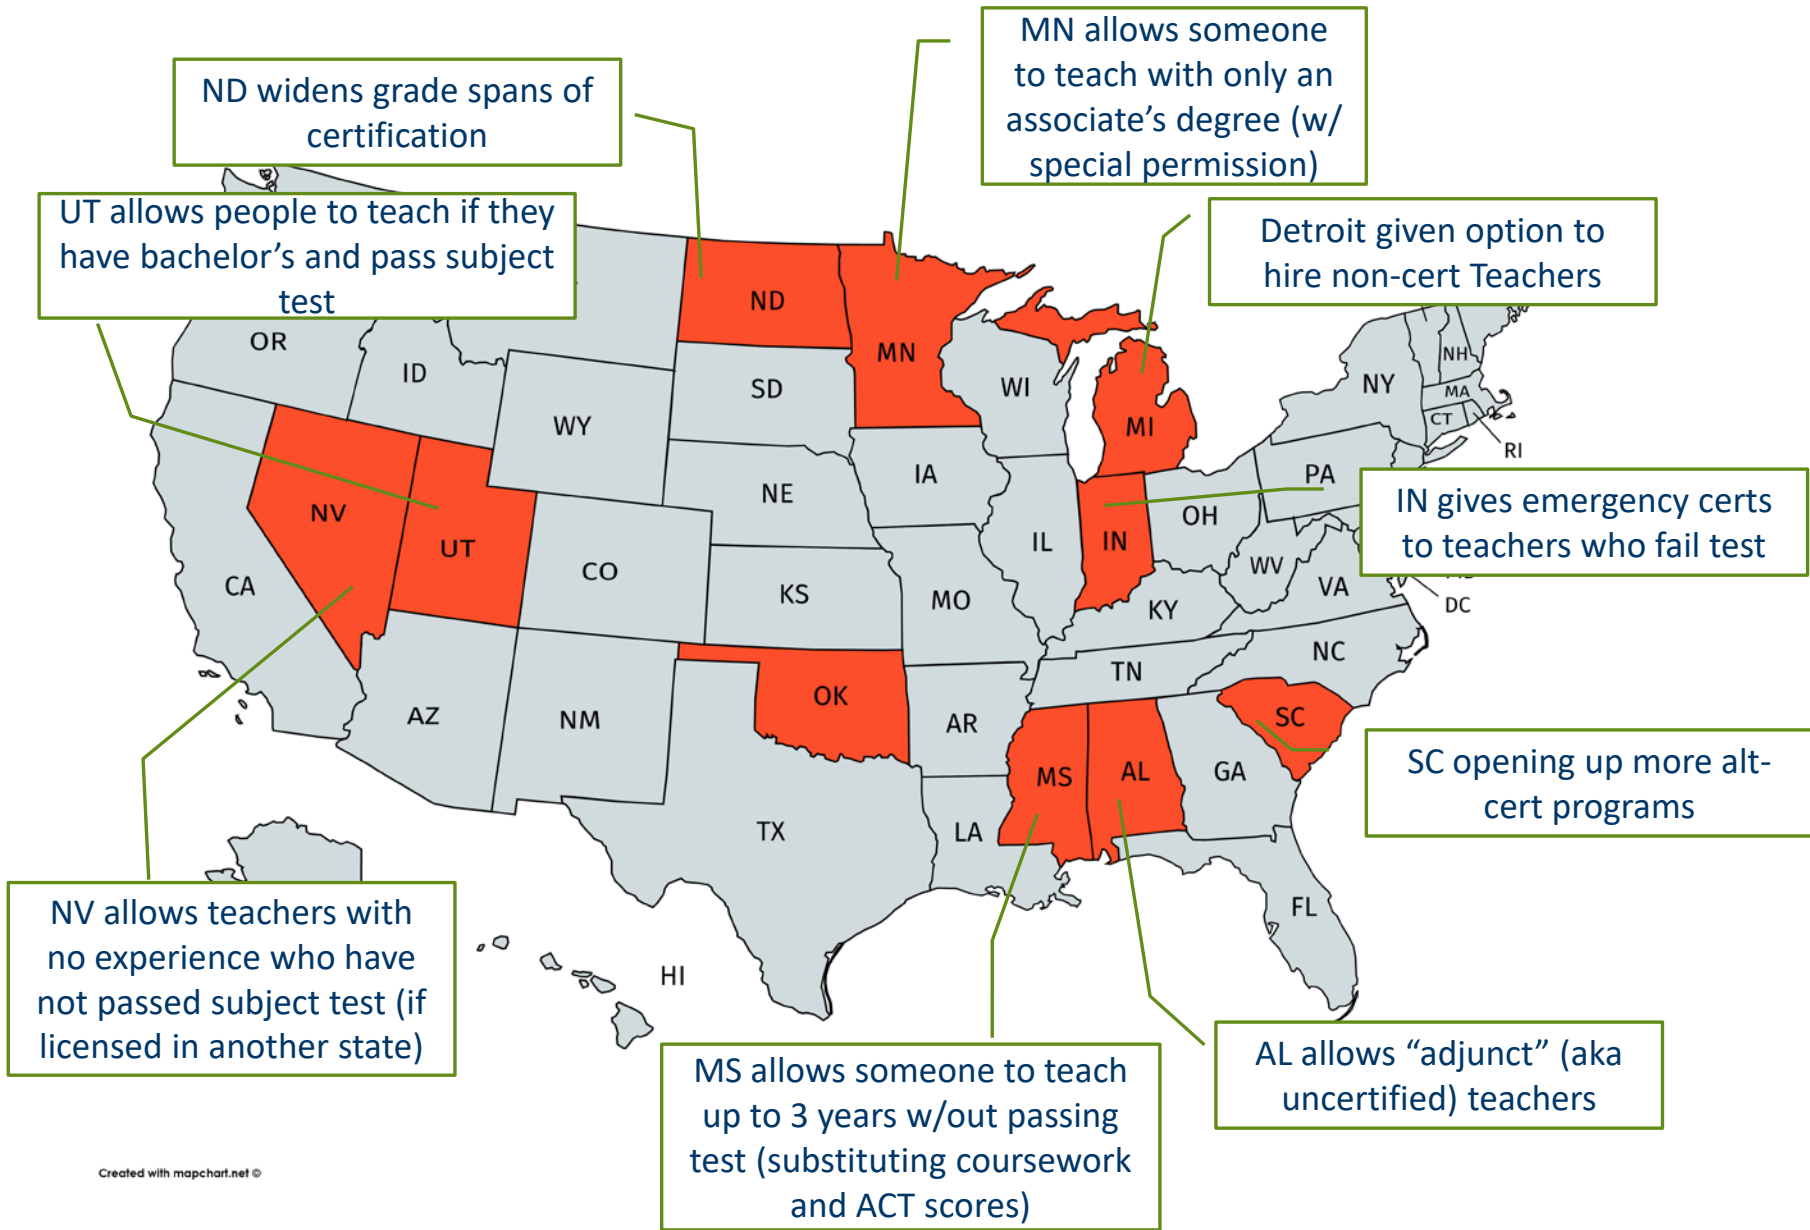

Common solutions for the “national shortage”

Raise salaries

Lower entry requirements

Improve working conditions

ND widens grade spans of certification

MN allows someone to teach with only an associate's degree (w/ special permission)

UT allows people to teach if they have bachelor's and pass subject test

Detroit given option to hire non-cert Teachers

IN gives emergency certs to teachers who fail test

NV allows teachers with no experience who have not passed subject test (if licensed in another state)

SC opening up more alt-cert programs

MS allows someone to teach up to 3 years w/out passing test (substituting coursework and ACT scores)

AL allows "adjunct" (aka uncertified) teachers

Policy levers for a “misalignment”

Strategic pay

State reciprocity

Collaboration with prep programs

Targeted recruitment in specific subjects

Better data systems

State approval limitations for prep programs

What does a good state data system look like?

Teacher prep program data of teacher candidates enrolling in and completing programs of teacher candidates produced in each certification area

%age of graduates hired in each cert area

%age of graduates working in high-needs schools

District data

Projected vacancies for upcoming 1-2 years by subject or cert area

Actual vacancies at specified points in time (e.g., start of hiring process and one month into school year)

“Health” of hiring process – date position opened, applicants per position, reasons applicants were not hired